“ Stacey was a beautiful woman with a beautiful spirit. Her absence is painful for all who knew and loved her. She shared her faith with anyone who cared to listen. Stacey's best days are yet to come in the arms of her Lord and savior Jesus.

“ Do i know where to start? Not really, but I'll give it a go. You came into my life 13 years ago, I was a 12 year old little boy and at first I was iffy. I had a woman that came into life wanting to be a mother to me. I constantly pushed you away, not because I didn't like you ... but because I was scared. I didn't want to be let down again. As time went on, you still tried and tried and I wouldn't let you in. Then one day, I was in highschool and I called you because I got into some deep shit. You made it to EJ within 10 minutes, and if you know Stacy, that's record time. After that day is when I started to open up to you, and talk to you, and let you be there for me. You know, you may have annoyed all of us in the house with your 3am vacuum sessions, or you coming in our rooms drowning in sweat at 12 in the morning asking us to help you with your garden. But that's what made you the person you were. Me and my dad were having a conversation the other night, and what he told me was true. You could curse Stacy out, call her every name in the book, and she would never get offended. She would throw it all back at you, while having a smile on her face, I'll miss that smile. .... Tose are the moments I'll cherish the most. You always ask me if my kids will remember you, and like I told you. They may not remember you psychically, but they will always know who their Honey is. You always worried about me, and I always told you i was ok. You knew I wasn't ok. I could never lie to you, cause I would just start busting out laughing. You were my mom, my best friend, my fighter, you were everything to me. You were there for me at my happiest times, and you were there for me at my darkest times. I can't thank you enough for that. I can't walk into your room and joke about not liking you for 5 years anymore. There's no more coming to lay with you when I come visit. . you taught me, a lot. You taught me love, you taught me how to be a better parent, you taught me how to never give up and constantly push myself to the best I can be. I love you for that, I will always love you for that. You asked me to take care of my little brother, and pops... that's the least I can for you. I love you, mom.

“ My sidekick. You made it. You made it to the last places you wanted to go, Florida and Heaven! You are finally at peace and I'm so happy it's unfair to you and your beautiful soul and heart but I am so glad you are no longer in the suffering you were! You stayed strong for 8 years for everyone and I literally mean everyone more than yourself. You left shopping for you. I love you and miss you so much already but you're here and I feel you, you never left, you didn't want to.
