“Del was never one to sit on the sidelines. As an educator, scholar, committed social activist, and avid William Faulkner fan, among her many other activities, she lived life large and we loved her. In 2008, her determined political campaigning for Barack Obama won her a place at the D.C. inauguration and a close encounter with the new president. At the 2016 New Orleans Women's March, she carried signs advocating for women and the humane treatment of migrants. At the same time, she was a devoted Mom who adored her children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. We will always cherish our exciting and fun-filled visits with Del and Steve, her beloved husband. They were our dear friends who made the world better for their presence.

“Del and I go back to the late '70's. She took me under her wings back when I began as an adjunct at Delgado Community College, and was a true mentor for me. Over the next many years, there are lots of fond memories of her guidance and friendship. She touched the lives of many and I know she'll be missed by all who knew her.

“So sorry to hear that our Delgado colleague and much beloved friend Del is gone. She was a pleasure to work with, always willing to share, help out or go the extra mile. To her children and grandchildren, you were fortunate to have her as a parent and role model -- my condolences as you learn to fill the void her passing has left.

“Del was a woman who wanted to save the world, something she told me numerous times. And she did so through her humanism, her environmentalism, and her love of family. I will remember her wedding (following, in unusual sequence, her retirement), her rescuing Janet French and me after the threat of Hurricane Ivan (booking rooms for us in what turned out to be a hooker hotel!), her presence next to me at the Memorial Service for Charlie Bellone shortly after Katrina, a final lunch with her at Lebanon's Cafe my last day in New Orleans, and most of all my final phone call with her just weeks before her death. She was upbeat and characteristically positive, repeating that she'd had a good life. We talked for an hour, laughed, and reminisced. I told her she was my role model, and that's no lie. I will always remember her.
