“ Mama Angelica LOVED red lipstick. When I was little, she would put it on and kiss me. She loved to transfer the color onto my lips. She had this really cool one that was bright yellow and would turn colorful once you’ve had it on.

At first, it would be a light pink, but after the warmth had the chance to set in, it would change to this vibrant red color.

The last time I went to go visit Mama Angelica, I found that same old tube of lipstick. The very same “special” yellow one that Mama Angelica always had hidden away. And of course, it’d brought back my memories of when I was a little girl.

She’d seen that I’d found it. Told me to put it on, and to give her a kiss. So I did. After I gave her a kiss, I’d seen that the red didn’t transfer very well. So I went to put some more on her and she stopped me. She raised her finger, right in front of her lips. And instructed me to put some more on myself, then to give her another kiss. How funny it is to me that she wouldn’t let me simply put it on her. But that I had to put it on myself, then transfer it to her. It made me think of all the times she used to do it to me. She really was the cutest. And it’s the little things like that, that flood my mind of fond memories. I will forever correlate red lipstick with Mama Angelica
