“ *I met Catherine, Joy's Godmother, while on a business trip to New Orleans a few years ago followed up by a several day stay with Joy at her home. While I don't have the actual scraps of paper in front of me now with the little quips, sayings, admonitions and words of advice I was showered upon by Catherine during those few days, the lasting memory of her mind, spirit and determined will remains with me today. I remember feeling that I was in the presence of a great lady, "une grande dame" as they say in French. She taught me to respect myself, to think highly of myself, to carry myself proudly in the world as a strong woman but also how to show vulnerabilty when appropriate. She told stories of hurricanes and floods in the city of New Orleans during her working days, of the ol' times back then during a different era and way of life. She recommended I use Palmolive soap for my face as it would make my skin smooth and glowing, thus attracting a suitable potential husband! Catherine was a practical and headstrong woman with a love for people and interest in the world. Even though I only knew her a couple of days, her memory lives on in my heart and in a way has impacted me and my life as do all the people we meet who come across our path for however long or short that may be. Her Goddaughter, Joy, who took her Aunt Catherine under her wing for the past several years, protecting her and making sure her needs were met, is a saint in my eyes and a beautiful, loving person and I am proud to call her my friend. “ *Dear Joy,
Great pictures of your aunt. She was very attractive as a young woman and held onto it in her later years it seems. She was quite an integral part of New Orleans history. My aunt worked for the law firm Casey, Babin, and Casey for many years. Was her husband a lawyer?
Hold on to your fond memories and may God bless you and your beloved aunt.
