“ The day I knocked on her door, the sun was shining, weather was typical Louisiana weather before all the hurricanes and tornadoes we are experiencing. Brother Prater and I Sis. Ivy Lee noticed the light outside the door, another symbol of someone who had the wherewithal to make it possible to know, learn and meet their neighbors. From that day on I've never know her without that smile, I always apologized whenever we met for not being able to sign. She would give me that smug look and then smile. I knew she already understood that I had so much to say and wished I could just sit and we could talk for days.

I will miss her even though the distance didn't allow us to visit as much as we would want. At least I know now that should I make it into the new world, Deb would be there waiting to complete the conversation we never had.

May Jehovah bless the sons and husband of our Sis. Debra Madere.
