“ I was so sad to hear of Hamid's passing. I was honored to share the story of his experience before, during, and after Hurricane Katrina in my book A.D.: New Orleans After the Deluge. (He was also so kind to talk to me again, ten years after the hurricane, to catch me up on all that happened in the decade since.)

As different as we were in our backgrounds, I felt a real kinship with Hamid — with his sense of adventure and his matter-of-fact way of recounting his experiences. There were so many little things he did during the disaster, from giving away food after the storm, bringing bottles of water to stranded neighbors, and ensuring his friend's health, that I consider heroic. (Not to mention all the years of hard work he spent restoring the Superette to operation again.)

During our conversations, he talked fondly of fishing trips with friends and watching Saints football games on TV.

*I felt very honored to have known him, even tangentially, and I am so grateful that he was willing to share his experiences with the readers of *A.D.

My deepest condolences to Feeza, Abbas, and Nadia, and everyone else who held a place for Hamid in their hearts.

Rest in peace.

“ *My Dearest Hamid,
You left us so quietly and peacefully. You were always so private and even in death you remained the same way. Your love for us will enable us to slowly move forward. I have such big shoes to fill and I hope by being at your side for 36 years I have mastered your ways of doing things. Our children are so heart broken but I remind them of your fulfilling and unconditional LOVE for them. May Allah give you a resting place. I loved you the first day I met you and that love blossomed and gave us two beautiful children. You will always be the love of my life and I will take care of Nadia and Abbas until I join you.*

Love Always Feeza

Feeza, what you wrote is so moving. I will always remember the twinkle in Hamid's eyes when he smiled and his grilling prowess.
