“ As Maw Maw Boone's grandson in-law, I will miss her very much. She was very much like my own grandmother in many ways. She was a devoted grandmother to my wife, Inge, and it didn't take long for her and I to develop a grandmother/grandson relationship as I was dating Inge. I think she appreciated the playful jabs and sense of humor I had with her and she could dish it right back. Once we were dining as a family at Steak and Ale, and the bread was brought out with a large bread knife for cutting and spreading. I was playfully messing with her earlier, so she decided to pay me back - she stuck the entire knife clear through the bread where it was sticking out the other side and offered it to me across the table, complete bread loaf and knife, saying "Want some bread!". To this day, Inge, her parents and myself often recount that memory with a smile.

She loved her family, her deceased husband, and especially her pride and joy, her only grandchild, Inge. She also loved her bingo nights with her friends and neighbors. And she also loved her many years and customers at the Bon Ton restaurant, where she had so many memories, friends and stories she'd tell us. She was a very proud woman, and had much to be proud of.

And God is now proud to have you Maw Maw!
