“ I had the pleasure of knowing Mr. Bill for the past 6 years. He is my sister-in-law's father. The first time I met him was at my nephew Nicholas' christening in North Carolina. I was about 8 and a half months pregnant with my son and it was a HOT, uncomfortable day. Mr. Bill came and sat with me on a gigantic lounge chair and it was as if we'd known each other all our lives. I'm not sure we talked much but there was definitely a feeling of great comfort. In fact, I think we both dozed off, he in his food induced haze and me in my pregnancy haze. A few months later Katrina hit. That Christmas he and Cheryl came to Pittsburgh to celebrate with us. It was one of the nicest holidays we've had. Shortly after that his illness seemed to start rearing it's ugly head. Each time I saw him through the hard years, his kind heart and sweet personality showed itself in unique ways. I remember at the christening of my niece he was having trouble walking. But bound and determined he got up and shuffled his way across the room to where I was getting something to drink. He grabbed my arm and looked me in the eyes and said, "I wanted to thank you for helping me earlier." And then with all the strength he had he shuffled back to his seat. I think that was the most sincere thank-you I've ever received. From what I understand, that was Bill, illness or not. My heart goes out to the entire family for your loss. I hope that you each find comfort in the little stories that you'll hear from friends and acquaintances. Much Love!

“ My memory of Mr. Bill was short. Like a shooting star, it didn't last long but it burned brightly. For the 2010 Spartan King and Queen's party he sat next to me the entire night. He wanted only dessert, a man after my heart. I knew he was showing signs of illness but he refused to give into it. He handled himself with dignity despite what was ravaging him. I called him Carl the whole night and he answered me. I called him that because he was so much like my Uncle Carl whom I had just lost. I think it was God's way of telling me that Uncle Carl was okay. I got to spend the evening with two special men, Mr. Bill and my Uncle Carl. I hope that they are both together now reminiscing about their meeting in my heart. Thank you Mr. Bill and rest peacefully.
